The time was not ripe for railways in China, and the Company formed with such sanguine hopes perished of manition.

The promoters of the China Railways Company were not even correct in supposthe British Minister. Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, though disposed to back up his countrymen in most matters, held that it was impolitie at that stage to put pressure on the Chinese Government in order to ferce it to undertake reforms or improvements In a despatch to Lord STANLEY, then Minister for Foreign Affairs, in January 1868. Sir ROTHERFORD, referring the making of railways, opening of mines, &c., in China, writes :- "The working of mines and laying down of railroads and telegraphs not only involve a great revolu tion, social, political, and industrial, wherever they are introduced, but meet with other difficulties and objection. They are in conflict with popular superstitions sufficiently widely spread and deeply rooted in the minds of the people to make it impossible for any Government, however strong, to disregard them with safety. But it has already been shown that the present Government ids, all of which are excellent quality and under a minority of the Emperor and with insurrections in every province, is not strong, don House, and bought direct from the most and, on the contrary, nearly powerless, 1,200-horse power, for another term of service on wife and family. But these are not the only objections and difficulties in the way of such schemes. They involve a great outlay of capital, which the Government is Bot. equally unprepared to supply, or to borrow from foreigners. If for no other reason than this that it would lead to the latter's ac quiring rested rights of capital and land in the interior." Sir RUTHERFORD goes on to remark that the example of Egypt had not places of interest here is the Government tea. Gove, ors, Administrators, and officials of this objected to allow foreigners to acquire vested tion. The tea is very good and the flavour az- be expected we should always look through the interests in China for fear they should be made a pretext for intervention by foreign. owers. In a further despatch to the Foreign Office, dated Peking, April 9, 1868 His Excellency gives his opinion again very plainly on the same subject. He says:-"

do not think it would be expedient to attempt the insertion of a clause in any new treaty to compel the Chinese Government to construct and work railways themselves, or to give the power to foreigners to do so. I believe both which coonered during the month. Casualties railroads and telegraphs will come; and a lives lost by such casualties are not included. beginning may not be so far off as outward manifestations of difficulty or repuguance on the part of the Chinese high authoriperionce in Chinese affairs leads me to touch at Cherbourg, Portsmouth, and either the conclusion that we do not advance but retard great innovations by seeking to deprive the Chinese Government of all free will and spontaneity. ... By frewhether of administrative reform or material improvements, the Chinese mind gets habituated to consider them in all their bearings, and at last ceases to look with alarm this way I think I see a gradual change, full of railways. And if they could be induced. of their own free will, to have a survey made for a short line between the capital and Takus the port of Tientsin, from whence immediate practical advantages would result to the Government and population, a decision to undertake the work might very quickly and easily follow. But if any foreign Representative were to broach the subject and endeavour to bring about prompt decision. I feel assured the result would be indefinitely postponed." In the light of subsequent events, the above remarks will be saen to have united prescience with sound sense. The Chinese continued for many years to fight excessively shy of the hated and dreaded innovation. The toy railway it was proposed by the Duke | the kitchen of her house, No: 10, New Street of SUTERELA D and others to present to the Emperor Tune Cut in 1873 was none too she fell, talling upon the lamp, which at once courteously declined; the mandarins would have none of it, and feared the young Empuror might be seduced by the novelty of the plaything to throw his weight in the scala for the introduction of the innovation. Again in the afternoon in 1876, when the little Woosung Railway was constructed the Chinese Authorities Bitters, &c. never ceased their opposition until they had effected its purchase, which was followed in fion had been received from the ex-Sultan 1877 by its being first closed to traffic and then torn up and shipped, plant, rails, and all, bodily to Formon, there to rust and rot Editor, not for publication, but as evidence of good in godowns, so much were they alarmed lest foreigners should acquire any interest in milways in any part of the Celestial Empire. SUPREME COURT 4th September.

IN BANKRUPTCY

BEFORE HIS HONOUE MR. FIELDING CLAIKE, ACTING CHIEF JUSTICE. IN RE JOHN FRANCIS WEBBER.

Mr. He Wyson appeared for the petitioning Mr. Rodyk said he appeared to oppose this petition on behalf of Mr Fraser Smith, acting under Mr. Webber's power of attorney. grounds of objection were set out in Mr. France Smith's affidavit. First of all, with regard the act of bankruptcy, he anbmitted Mr. Webber had committed no not of bankruptcy in the sound required for adjudication. The allegation was that he left the Colony with the intention to defeat and delay his creditors. LORD HABRIS ON THE ART OF MUS. C. Poors, 12th August. -The Poons Gayan Samaj, or native Philbarmonic Society, gave an entertainment to Lord Harris this evening. A few European ladies and gentlemen were present. A programme of muric, both vocal and instrumental, was gone through very creditably. At the close Lord Harris said he was ple use I to witness the success of the Institution. Music was useful to the public speaker as it enabled him to modulate his voice for the benefit of his hoarers. He could not appreciate Oriental music, though he had had considerable experience of Oriental music in China, Japan, Siam and India, just as Natives could not appreciate European music. Englishmen were always striving to raise every art, occupation or amusement in which they were engaged to a higher level. Therefore he Thermom. 4 P.M ... 88 congratulated the Institution on following Englishmen and taking up a noble task in attempting to revive the art of music.

WHY THERE IS NO FAMINE RE. LIEF FUND THIS YEAR.

We take the following article from the North China Herald :-It simust seems wrote our correspondent i Western Shantung the other day, that the whole of North China is under water. This means, as we know only too well now, that thorounds of families are honeless now, an hundreds of thousands of pior people will be dying of starvation when the winter comes or Meanwhile, they perhaps are asking where the Shanghai Relief Fund Committee ? Th committee worked nobly during the last famine collected hundreds of thousands of taels, and re ceived honoritic tablets from the Nanking Vicercy: why are they doing nothing now The need is at least as great, and the missions ries would no doubt gladly undertake the die tribution as before; why is there no money forth coming? To this it will possibly be answered that there is a relief fund being collected, confined indeed at present to the inundated round Tientain. Day after day contributious to this fund are acknowledged in our columns; it amonute already now to something like seven thousand dollars. Why, first, is there this special subscription, and secondly, why is there no general fund this year, when all the machinery is on the spot, and only waiting for the first dollar to be put in the s'ot to start it?

The answer to the first question is that this so-called subscription is really black-mail. It is compulsory charity. The piece-goods dealers in Tientain have sent down to the dealers here, and asked them to send up money, and this subscription is the result. So far is it from being a voluntary subscription, that it is gravely reported that the dealers here met in conclave, and secosed the various firms who deal with the north at sums varying with the importance of their trads. Then they went to these firms and said, not, will you give us a subscription, but, we expect you to give so and so much. Resistance has, we believe, in one or two cases been tried; there were men who said "Well, if they come to me, I'm not going to give anything; I don't believe I shall sell a bala less of yarn if I refuse than if I give." A day or two afterwards these very men's names are down in the list of subscribers. Sometimes the identity of the reluctant firm is disguised inder an anonym of some kind, but this is good enough for the piece goods dealers; they have got their black-mail. The dealers have their own way of enforcing it | they were always much better at combining than their foreign victims. This is, we believe, the true answer to the question, why is there this special subscription P -Why there is no general fund is answered with squal case : it is becomes sven the most charitable are disgusted with the Chinese government and their officials. If any serious and resequable attempt were made to control the waterways of North China and prevent these constantly recurring inundations, foreigners Oc would readily open their purses again; but they know, friendly anthey may be to the Chinese as a people, that nothing will be done. As the Chinese Times in its latest lasue puts it :- " In the mountime it is useless to arge in this country the measures which would be adopted in any other, and from old and new experience it is vain to hope that even within the circumscribed same officials who with much pomp and ceremony did nothing in the previous decade are appointed to repeat the exhibition now. The outlook for the country is indeed depressing."
